Use this form to appeal your suspension of student financial aid eligibility only if you have “just cause” for not being able to meet the minimum standards for satisfactory academic progress. Your appeal will be decided on the basis of written information and supporting documentation from an impartial third-party (not a family member, friend, roommate) submitted with this appeal. Examples of objective third-parties include: physician, counselor, lawyer, teacher, clergy, etc. An appeal must be based on extenuating circumstances that seriously affected your academic performance. Be as specific as possible. Examples of extenuating circumstances are injuries, serious illness, death of an immediate family member, and undue hardship as a result of a special circumstance.

Complete the back of this form to describe the extenuating and unusual circumstances beyond your control that contributed to your failing to meet the minimum standard(s) for satisfactory academic progress. You must address all semesters in which you did not meet the academic progress requirements. Examples of appeals that are given consideration for extenuating circumstances include:

- Documented extended illness or hospitalization of student
