Looking for a Job?

The Career Development and Counseling Center has a number of resources to help you with your job search.

Employers list part-time, full-time and internship positions as well as seasonal (holiday/summer) jobs with our office. Some of these positions are posted on the bulletin board outside of our office, Founders Room 121. But many more can be found on our online job board: CCN (College Central Network). You can find the CCN logo on our homepage or you can go directly to their website to register from the icon below:

Most employers will ask you to schedule a time to meet and/or go in to fill out an application. However, some employers will request that you forward a resume and cover letter. If you are unsure how to prepare these job search documents, we have materials available in our office to assist you. Please stop by or call the office (860-343-5826) to schedule an appointment for someone to review your resume and make recommendations.

Priority Registration

Summer & Fall Registration Dates
Registration for continuing students for Summer and Fall 2020 is currently scheduled to begin on March 23, 2020. Students will be allowed to register both in person and online. Stay posted for any modifications to this date!
The beginning of new student registration will be announced at a later date.

All students are assigned an advisor. Meeting with your advisor is an important part of the registration process. If you are unsure of who your advisor is, you may log onto www.my.commnet.edu, select Banner Self-Service, select Student Records, select View Student Information, and then look for your primary advisor’s name.

Finding Your Career Path

Congratulations! You, most likely, have now completed one, two, or more semesters here at Middlesex Community College. Now that you have better determined the amount of time needed to study, the academic expectations of faculty, and the complexities of balancing school, home, and work, it may be time to look at how your education at Middlesex will assist in your future endeavors.

There are literally thousands of careers that exist and more that develop every year. Determining in what capacity you want to enter the workforce is a difficult decision. There are many issues to consider. The most crucial part of this decision-making process is self-assessment…in other words… looking at yourself and determining your interests, abilities, and values and how these might best translate into the world of work.

To begin, try to identify your areas of interest. What do you enjoy? Which activities make you happy? Do you like to interact and work with others? How do you feel about working with your hands and making things? Do you like to do creative/artistic activities? Are you someone who enjoys calculating and/or analyzing data? Do you enjoy being outside? These are a few of the questions to consider as you try to determine what your interests are. As you think about starting in a career, try to determine what you like.

After you have gathered information concerning your interests, try to determine your abilities…those things you do well. What are you “good at”? Again, there may be numerous skill sets that you may possess. You may have the ability to communicate effectively; to persuade others; to advise or guide. Your skills may include: research, writing, analysis, or data collection. Some people write well while others have artistic ability. Try to sit down and brainstorm a list of those things you do well. Often it is helpful to speak with those who know you well and solicit input from them. Sometimes it is difficult for people to identify skills because we do not often sit around thinking about what we do well. As you attempt to make tentative career decisions, it simply makes sense to take inventory of your skills.

Another critical component of self-assessment is identifying your values. What is important to you? For some, contributing to the welfare of others is crucial. Others consider it very important to have a prestigious career. Some work values include type of setting (office/outdoors/school), work schedule (40 hours/flexible schedule/” traditional 9-5”), role/importance of compensation, utilization of previous education/training, travel requirements, or stability of the field. Determining your values as they pertain to work is important; most of us spend at least a third of our day in the work environment. Take some time and think about in what environment you might flourish.

Now, you may say this is all fine but….I love art but I have no abilities in that area, or sports is something I enjoy, but how will I make money in it, or I am really good at math, but I would not want to work with numbers all day, or it is important to me that I give back to society and help others but can I make the type of income I want in the “helping” professions. All the above statements are legitimate. However, learning about yourself is the first step in the process. Then, yes, you may determine a miss match with an occupation based on any of these criteria. If you like art but do not believe you have the ability level to develop a career, then maybe you choose to draw as a hobby. If you cannot find an occupation that meets your financial needs based on function, then maybe you choose to become involved in a civic organization and earn an income in another type of position. There is no exact formula for determining your career. The more you learn about yourself and the types of occupations that exist, the more the likelihood of your making sound decisions.

And after you have made these tentative decisions what do you do? There are numerous ways to explore occupations. Some of these include reading materials on careers, speaking with those already employed in the field, taking coursework in the area, or volunteering/working part time in the occupation.

Here in the Career Development and Counseling Center, Founders, room 121, we have resources to assist you in this journey. Our career counselors may aid you in evaluating your interests/abilities/values through simply speaking with you. In addition, our computerized guidance system, Focus, has inventories that may assist you in assessment. The Career Center library has books that describe career fields and discussed alternatives.
Planning to Transfer?

Are you planning to transfer this Fall? If so, now is the time to begin planning and researching. Many colleges and universities have early application deadlines. So what do you need to do? Here is a quick guide.

Identify Your Transfer Institution
Meet with a Middlesex counselor, attend the mini transfer fairs described on the next page, and visit the colleges & universities that are your top choices. It is important to gauge how well your intended transfer institution meets your individual educational and social needs.

Are You A Transfer Student?
Based on your research, note whether or not you “qualify” as a transfer student. Many colleges and universities require a minimum number of credit hours from college to be considered a transfer student. Get clarification. Even though you are attending college, you may still have to forward high school and/or SAT information if you do not have the required number of credits to be considered a transfer student.

Essays & Letters of Recommendation
A well prepared essay and letters of recommendation take time to do well. If an essay is required for your application, write a rough draft and then seek input from a faculty member or the Career Development & Counseling Center staff.

When requesting letters of recommendation, contact individuals early enough to provide them sufficient time to write a letter. Also, please note that if the application solely asks for the names of individuals providing recommendations, you must obtain permission from individuals prior to using their name.

Transcripts
You will need to forward official transcripts from Middlesex (and any other college you have attended) directly to each school you apply to. If you are a first semester student, find out if the college/university wants a current schedule or simply grades sent at the end of the semester. If you are a student who has attended Middlesex prior to this semester and have an established academic record, you will need to forward transcripts at the time of application and again at the end of the semester after you obtain all spring semester grades.

Financial Aid
If you are planning to apply for financial aid, you must forward your FAFSA report directly to the colleges/universities you plan to apply to. They will determine if you qualify under their guidelines.

Does all of this seem a bit overwhelming? If so, please do not hesitate to contact the Career Development & Counseling Center, Founders Hall, Room 121, 860-343-5826, for assistance.

Scholarship Website Search Engines

For many students, finding the funds to attend college is a challenge. Many students will qualify for assistance from federal financial aid, need based monies, that may be obtained through filing the FAFSA (www.fafsa.ed.gov). There often are funds available through the college or university that a student attends which may be awarded in the form of a grant, merit scholarship, or funded via a foundation, to list a few. Some college honor societies will be able to assist students in identifying resources for scholarships. Students may also find that their or their parent’s employer sponsors scholarships or other alternatives for funding college expenses.

There are also numerous sources of potential scholarships available through private sources, some corporate, some foundation, some government as well as through philanthropic groups and organizations. We would recommend that you only consider those resources that are free to the student to use; however some of the scholarship sites may charge a fee. It takes time and energy to find these resources but the payoff, literally, may be what is necessary for you to find additional funding streams to afford college. Listed below are some of the better known websites to use in searching for scholarship information. Please recognize that these resources may change over time.
